A SNAPPY idea from school children impressed business leaders on Saturday.

Young Enterprise company Say Cheese put on an eye-catching display in the Nicholson Centre, Middlesbrough, as part of an annual trade fair.

The pupils from Bridgeline School, in Windsor, had set up a stand where shoppers could get their picture taken, which was then used to personalise a variety of products.

They were chosen as having the best trade stand by judges Eddie Pearce, president of the Middlesbrough and District Chamber of Commerce, David Walter, managing director of Hantekil and Young Enterprise county board chairman, and Jane Wright, Nicholson Centre manager.

Mr Pearce said: "They really went the extra mile."

Their award was presented by deputy mayor Cllr Catherine Burgess.

It is the first time the shopping centre has hosted the event, which also included stands from Charters School, selling head-ship bracelets, Claires Court School, selling shoe products and Windsor Boys' School, selling personalised Rubix cubes.

Young Enterprise development manager for Redburn, Jan Thompson said: "The trade fair is an excellent way to experience the reality of being in the marketplace."
